"I don't really think I—I think I respected certain components of one's presidency—Lincoln for his fairness, his determination, I'm going to preserve the Union. Then his equity that came with freeing of the slaves. That's so big and so strong that obviously it had to be inspiring. Teddy Roosevelt's commitment to the great outdoors and his, you know, kind of zest for life. His kids were around this very lawn out here. We have ours out there now. I mean, there's some examples of that kind. In fact, I'm not going to be driven off the golf course. Didn't affect Ike, and it isn't going to affect me either. I can do two things at once—mind the country's business and then every once in a while play golf. So I—I think there's a lot of examples in previous presidencies, pro and conns."—George Herbert Walker Bush last December 22, during a C-SPAN interview when asked about the influence of previous presidents on his own tenure in office.

"So far it did not reverberate in the negative there. The signature is being checked through the master computer, which is located someplace else, and we'll get an answer back after we leave."—George Herbert Walker Bush on February 4, using a signature-verifier at the National Grocers Association convention at which he made his legendary gaffe upon viewing a supermarket price scanner: "This is for checking out?"

"I'm all for Lawrence Welk. Lawrence Welk is a wonderful man. He used to be, or was, cr—whatever he is now; bless him."—George Herbert Walker Bush on February 16, at a question-and-answer session in Hollis, NH

"We've got the best health care plan there is and it does not socialize medicine in this country. It preserves the quality of care—gives health care access to all and it does it without reducing the quality of American education."—George Herbert Walker Bush on April 8

"As you know, I planned a trip out there for some time, so it fits in very nicely."—George Herbert Walker Bush on May 4, on plans to visit L.A. in the wake of the riots

"The next one is enterprise zones... And what that says is better than some make-work program, let's change the tax structure so you can draw like a magnet into the inner cities some businesses who are going to take a chance, who are going to take a gamble and it's going to be make—make it worth their while through the tax changes so they will then offer jobs with dignity in the private sector to those that have been bypassed as far as the American dream goes."—George Herbert Walker Bush on May 21, at a Bush-Quayle fund-raiser picnic in New York

"We are going to keep pushing, because I think the six goals are sound—math and science, and nobody is too old to learn. It gets into your whole feeling of adult education. Tests—volunteer, but nevertheless standard, so a parent can tell how his or her kid adds up to others across the country. And these are good"—George Herbert Walker Bush on May 27, at a question-and-answer session with schoolchildren in Marietta, Georgia.

"It won't be—of course, we have submitted a balance, but it won't be in two years. And we have submitted budgets that get in it. We've got one right up there now that does that. And I think it's going to be five years."—George Herbert Walker Bush on June 4, at a White House press conference, responding to a question about whether he would submit a balanced budget to Congress if he is re-elected.

"We've known each other a long, long time and I—when I—this isn't just kind of the normal, political endorsement. I really mean it."—George Herbert Walker Bush at a June 9 fund-raiser for Pennsylvania Senator Arlen Specter

"I think—I think my opinion as the—on the divorce—I mean as the abortions have gone up—my, my opposition to abortion has increased. And so I—yes, I think my—I think it's clearer to me now, and I'm not, I'm not going to change my position."—George Herbert Walker Bush on June 24, in an interview with Barbara Walters on ABC

"So we've got to win that drug fight, and we have got the biggest and best research by far, uh, program of any country in the world, but it's a national problem, it's one where we really—it's it's Heartbreak Hill, it's just everybody in one way or another has a friend that been touched with this and we'll just simply have to, have to win this fight, and I'm optimistic we will."—George Herbert Walker Bush on July 20, talking to children about AIDS in the Rose Garden

"... But that I'm out of touch with the American people, that I don't know people are hurting. I know it. I feel it. We pray about it, and I mean that literally at night and, oh, many other things, the various—where I don't care about—don't know about education or don't—I mean, we've got a sound approach, innovative, revolutionary approach, and so I've got to make that clear."—George Herbert Walker Bush on August 16, in an interview with David Brinkley
